Motivation Traits

The series of questions presented here will help you to determine the traits that make up your traits within your motivation metaprogram. They will give you some insights into what triggers your interest and, also, what will demotivate you.

You may think that you can answer the questions well enough on your own by reading them and by making notes. However, in order to get real value from this exercise, you should get someone to interview you asking you the series of questions focussing on the context of your work. To help you, they should write down your answers as fully as possible.

Check the answers that you give against the patterns of the trait. Rather than what you said, focus on how you answered the questions and the words that you used.

You will be surprised at the results that you will get from doing it this way.

Blending your traits together will give you really interesting information about how your motivation patterns drive the way you express yourself and your behaviours.

The questions are taken from “Words That Change Minds: Mastering the Language of Influence” by Shelle Rose Charvet

(Kendall/Hunt Publishing Co, U.S.; 2nd Revised edition (1 April 1997))
