1) Close supervision is not necessary in situations where team members have participated in discussions about job-related issues.

2) Team members' rights and feelings are more important than the job in hand.

3) I drive high standards of performance and encourage team members to achieve these standards.

4) I often give orders in the form of a suggestion, but make it clear what I want.

5) In the long run, I will fire or arrange a transfer for anyone that I find unmanageable.

6) I expect my team members to carry out plans exactly as I have prepared them.

7) I tend to rely on group consensus rather than direct supervision or control.

8) A mark of a good leader involves developing close relationships with team members.

9) I get team members to follow my example rather than establishing close personal relationships with them.

10) When a team member fails to perform, I calmly but firmly let them know why they have failed.

11) I give team members responsibility but take it back if they don't perform.

12) I try to reduce resistance to my decisions by indicating what team members have to gain.

13) A leader's job is to motivate team members by providing feedback on their performance.

14) I create work plans that represent the ideas of my team members.

15) A popular leader is better than an unpopular one.

16) Firm discipline is important in getting the job done.

17) I have high standards of performance and little sympathy for anyone not achieving these standards.

18) When a team member's plan is inappropriate, I suggest that they rethink the matter and come up with another.
